

Total Truth is marked by Nancy Pearcey's signature clarity, readability, and intellectual depth. It presents a passionate case for an integral and culturally relevant biblical worldview. It is rare to find a book of such religious and intellectual integrity which is at the same time so accessible and enjoyable.

—AL WOLTERS, author, Creation Regained

Anybody who has read Nancy Pearcey knows to expect a careful review of the literature, a keen discussion of the issues, and a creative analysis of the way ahead—all expressed in a clear and lively way. Total Truth does not disappoint: it addresses the most important issue facing the Christian church today.

—PAUL MARSHALL, Senior Fellow at Freedom House's Center for Religious Freedom, author, Heaven Is Not My Home

Nancy Pearcey has written a book that spans intersections of secular thought and Christian orientation over a wide cultural horizon. While Francis Schaeffer gave a whole generation a credible framework in Christianity for the flow of ideas and their consequences, Pearcey goes more into the text and demonstrates how correct Schaeffer was in his analysis.

—UDO MIDDELMANN, Director, Francis A. Schaeffer Foundation

In an easy-to-read, well-documented, sometimes provocative text, Nancy Pearcey has provided a superb worldview lens through which we can see things more clearly. All who read it will live their lives differently.

—BECKY NORTON DUNLOP, VP for External Relations,
the Heritage Foundation

Nancy Pearcey is a gifted writer and thinker. She offers clarity and insight in the midst of a cacophony of cultural trends and competing political and philosophical points of view.

—FRANCIS J. BECKWITH, Associate Director,
J. M. Dawson Institute of Church-State Studies, and
Associate Professor of Church-State Studies, Baylor University

It doesn't matter how many Christians gain positions of influence in the cultural gatekeeping institutions if we don't permit our worldview to shape what we do. Total Truth recovers the biblical admonition to live all of life to God's glory.

—WILLIAM WICHTERMAN, congressional aide

Nancy Pearcey takes the analysis of worldviews to another level, in the most insightful applications since Francis Schaeffer.

—GENE EDWARD VEITH, Culture Editor, World magazine

Total Truth is well written, clear, and insightful. The prose is extremely easy to read, even though Pearcey is often dealing with heady philosophical subjects. . . . a great book.

—JAY RICHARDS, VP, the Discovery Institute

The important point Nancy Pearcey makes in her excellent and well-documented book is that Christians must not check their worldviews on the way out the church door. Christians need to do more than slap a veneer of Christianity over their work, hobbies, and studies. They need to fully integrate their faith with all of life.

—CURT LOVELACE, Executive Director, Lifework Forum

A fascinating study! The perspective is fresh, helpful, moving, and challenging. Total Truth is simple yet profound, passion-filled without being “preachy,” broad in scope and centered on fundamental issues.

—JOHN VANDER STELT, Professor Emeritus of Philosophy,
Dordt College

I like the way Nancy Pearcey tells personal stories that help to incarnate the issues and make them come alive. I appreciate her clear, concrete, lively writing style. This message should get a wide hearing.

—MICHAEL GOHEEN, Professor of Worldview Studies,
Redeemer University College

With the passion of an advocate and the skill of a surgeon, Nancy Pearcey sets forth the elements of a Christian worldview and then makes a persuasive case for Christian involvement in society.

—KERBY ANDERSON, National Director, Probe Ministries,
Cohost, “Point of View”

TOTAL TRUTH

Liberating Christianity from Its Cultural Captivity

NANCY R. PEARCEY

FOREWORD BY
Phillip E. Johnson

CROSSWAY BOOKS

A DIVISION OF
GOOD NEWS PUBLISHERS
WHEATON, ILLINOIS

Total Truth: Liberating Christianity from Its Cultural Captivity

Copyright © 2004 by Nancy R. Pearcey

Published by Crossway Books,
a division of Good News Publishers
1300 Crescent Street
Wheaton, Illinois 60187

Published in association with Yates & Yates, LLP, Attorneys and Counselors, Orange, California.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopy, recording, or otherwise, without the prior permission of the publisher, except as provided by USA copyright law.

Cover design: Chris Gilbert, UDG / Designworks, www.udgdesignworks.com

Cover photo: “Le Semeur 1” http://www.kmm.nl/index_flash.html#voorpagina

First printing 2004

Printed in the United States of America

Unless otherwise indicated, all Scripture quotations are from The Holy Bible, English Standard Version, copyright © 2001 by Crossway Bibles, a division of Good News Publishers. Used by permission. All rights reserved.

The Scripture quotation marked KJV is from the King James Version of the Bible.

All emphases in Scripture quotations have been added by the author.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Pearcey, Nancy.

Total truth: liberating Christianity from its cultural captivity / Nancy R.

Pearcey ; foreword by Phillip E. Johnson.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 1-58134-458-9 (HC : alk. paper)

1. Christianity—Philosophy. 2. Apologetics. 3. Christian life.
4. History—Religious aspects—Christianity. 5. History—Philosophy.

I. Title.

BR100.P37 2004

261—dc22

2003019514

16 15 14 13 12 11 10 09 08 07 06 05 04
15 14 13 12 11 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

FOREWORD

When Nancy Pearcey invited me to write a foreword for her “worldview” book, I hastened to accept the honor. I was honored by the invitation because this is a book of unusual importance by an author of unusual ability.

It has been a treat for me to read and study the manuscript, and I feel that I am doing a great favor to every potential reader whom I can persuade to enjoy these pages as I have done. Nancy Pearcey is an author who is greatly respected by all who know her work. I hope that, with this book, she will receive the acclaim that her thought and writing has so long deserved, and that readers will find in its message of liberation the key to intellectual and spiritual renewal.

It would be an understatement to say that worldview is an important topic. I would rather say that understanding how worldviews are formed, and how they guide or confine thought, is the essential step toward understanding everything else. Understanding worldview is a bit like trying to see the lens of one’s own eye. We do not ordinarily see our own worldview, but we see everything else by looking through it. Put simply, our worldview is the window by which we view the world, and decide, often subconsciously, what is real and important, or unreal and unimportant.

It may be that a worldview is commonly a collection of prejudices. If so, the prejudices are necessary, because we can’t start from a blank slate and investigate everything from scratch by ourselves. When somebody tells me that he receives guidance from God in prayer, or that science is our only way of knowing anything for sure, or that there is no objective difference between good and evil, I need to have some verifiable frame of reference to tell me at once whether he is merely deluded or is saying something that is sufficiently sensible to merit serious consideration.

Similarly, when I tell my fellow Berkeley professors that I don’t believe the theory of evolution, I need to know why they find it so difficult to take me seriously or to believe that my objection to the theory is based on scientific evidence rather than on the book of Genesis. The reason is that evolution with its accompanying philosophy is identified with their worldview at such a deep level that they cannot imagine how the theory could possibly be contrary to the evidence.

Every one of us has a worldview, and our worldview governs our thinking even when—or especially when—we are unaware of it. Thus, it is not uncommon to find well-meaning evildoers, as it were, who are quite sincerely convinced that they are Christians, and attend church faithfully, and may even hold a position of leadership, but who have absorbed a worldview that makes it easy for them to ignore their Christian principles when it comes time to do the practical business of daily living. Their sincerely held Christian principles are in one mental category for them, and practical decision making is in another. Such persons can believe that Jesus is coming again to judge the world and yet live as if the standards of this world are the only thing that needs to be taken into account.

Likewise, Christian education is likely to be an exercise in futility if it does not prepare our young people to confront and survive the worldview challenges that they will surely meet as soon as they leave the security of the Christian home, and probably even while they are still living at home and being educated in a Christian environment, due to the pervasive influence of the media and the Internet. For example, a youngster may be taught very fine Christian principles, but he or she may also grow up understanding that these principles fit into a specialized category called “religious belief.”

Sooner or later, that youngster will find out that secular college professors, and sometimes even Christian professors, proceed from an implicit assumption that religious beliefs are the kind of thing one is supposed to set aside when learning how the world really works, and that it is usually praiseworthy to “grow” gradually away from those beliefs as a part of the normal process of maturing.

Why do those professors think that? Of course they are being influenced by the dominant belief system in their academic culture, which is also the culture of the newsroom at most daily newspapers or television stations. But just to say that people are influenced by their cultural environment does not explain how our culture has come to be the way it is, when it used to be very different. To survive in modern or postmodern American culture without being overwhelmed by its concealed prejudices, everyone needs to know how to recognize those prejudices, to understand what kind of thinking brought them into existence, and to be able to explain to ourselves and others what is wrong with the pervasive assumptions that often come labeled only as “the way all rational people think,” and that will swamp our faith if we are not alert to them.

A fine education in worldview analysis is as basic an element of a modern Christian’s defense system as a shield was in the days when a prudent traveler needed to be prepared to repel an attack by sword-wielding robbers. Today the intellectual brigands rob unwary youths of their faith, and they do it with arguments based on the shifting sand of “what everybody knows” and “the way we think today.” Those youths need to find the solid rock, and they need to know both why the rock is solid, and why the world prefers the shifting sand.

Only a very gifted author is capable of writing a book about worldview analysis that will make exciting reading for the ordinary person, but which is also sufficiently informed by scholarship to convey a deep understanding of the subject rather than merely a superficial acquaintance. Everyone is aware that American culture changed enormously during the twentieth century, but very few people understand how the change was brought about by ideas and habits that seemed at first to be eccentric or of only minor importance, but that eventually crept into the popular culture and proved to be almost irresistible. The situation we find ourselves in today has deep roots in the thinking of earlier times. Conduct that not very long ago was regarded as perverse or criminal has become not only tolerated but the new norm. Those who dare to disapprove of that conduct, or just fail to applaud the new norm with sufficient enthusiasm, are themselves likely to feel the full weight of society’s disapproval. The change in conduct was brought about by changes in worldview, which caused those who followed the new fashions to think differently.

With that much of an introduction, I invite you to read Nancy Pearcey. You will find not only pleasant reading but all the elements and basic information necessary to produce a Christian mind with a map of reality that really works. When Christian parents, pastors, educators, and other leaders learn to give this subject the importance it deserves, and to practice it even as they teach it thoroughly in the home, from the pulpit, and in every classroom, then Christians will find that they are no longer fearful and timid when they have to address claims of worldly wisdom. So let’s get started.

—Phillip E. Johnson
Berkeley, California
January 2004